

What do human beings look like to you, Emmanuel?

When I see a soul, I see Light—crystalline, pure, expanded and very beautiful. When I see a human being, I see that very same soul often cramped, struggling beneath an overlay of various diminishing hues that cause the brilliance to remain entrapped in the more opaque auric qualities. Beneath, of course, is the true Light of God in each soul. When I view you with my love, I see that Light very much as you do when you view each other with love.

Would you like to know the colors of doubt and fear? I will begin at the darkest color, which is denial of God, hate (the absence of love), and that is a very dark blackness. It is illusion, but a deep and dense illusion at times. Fear can be seen not only as the emotion itself, which is a closing down, a greyness, but also when connected to accompanying rage, it can be a scream of most intense and unpleasant sulphurish yellow.

Passion, in whatever manifestation, is various shades of red. Intellect is often yellow, and when it is being used for positive purposes, it is a golden, buttery yellow. When it is used to deny the heart, then it becomes a denser form of the same color.

Green is healing—the healing that is taking place within the body or the longing to heal others, which is often comingled with a soft pink which is love, human love.

Love of God glows white. Silver is communication, speaking. When it is speaking truth, it has brilliance and sparkle. When it is denying truth, or used manipulatively, it becomes steel grey.

Blue is a most radiant beam when it is connected to expanded spirituality, or to the empathetic relationship between human beings. There is also a deeper blue, every bit as clear and beautiful, as it reflects the deep emotions within yourselves when you are in direct and truthful communication with your own inner being.

Lavender, purple, these are the colors of spirit. Often, though not necessarily, spirit guides are seen to wear these colors when they first appear to you.

Gold is God's Love, given to the world through your willingness and your commitment to the works of such a calling.

You are all aware of these things. I speak to reawaken what each of you experienced in your very earliest days when you saw the colors surrounding the people in your life. They gave you distinct messages before you were able to understand words.

I see you all as rainbows.
